

ATTENDANCE POLICY FOR ONLINE COURSES

The College of Charleston is required to verify student attendance in its classes, including those offered online, for which physical presence might seem undefined. For example, logging onto a course website, such as an OAKS page, is not considered attendance. Completing an assignment, however, constitutes attendance.

The College of Charleston defines student attendance in an online class as "completion of any online assignment, whether graded or not" on any day of the term, even the first.