

Conseula A. Francis
English

2011 Distinguished Teaching Award

Conseula Francis received her B.A. in English from the University of Southwestern Louisiana in 1996, and her Ph.D. in English in from the University of Washington in 2002. In her nine years at the College of Charleston, she has taught a wide variety of American and African American literature courses, including Black Women's Literature, Black Science Fiction, the Harlem Renaissance, and Race and Memory in the Graphic Novel. She has directed the African American Studies Program since 2007.

Her publications include Conversations with Octavia Butler, which was nominated for a Locus Award for the year's best non-fiction book on science fiction, as well as publications on race in comics and contemporary African American romance fiction.