Heath Hoffmann, professor of sociology, joined the College in 2003. His teaching style continually evolves but always has three common threads: a student-centered approach to teaching, advising and mentoring; a focus on developing students’ ability to apply sociological ideas to contemporary problems; and intentional implementation of pedagogical innovations. An innovative, engaging and passionate educator who uses both in-person and online formats, Hoffmann approaches teaching with the goal of incorporating critical thinking and relating sociology to the real world with which the students can identify.
